PREFACE

Allegheny City, Pa., June, 1892.

The History of the Smiths was prepared by Rev. A. S. Abbey and read at one of the first reunions held in S. E. Kincaid's grove, Wayne, Erie Co., Pa. Afterwards it was suggested that the History be printed, together with a record of the family. Accordingly, in 1889, letters were sent to the different families asking for their respective family records. When I undertook the work it seemed as if it would not be a difficult task. To most of my letters I received a prompt reply, but to a few there was no response even after a third or fourth appeal. I therefore felt constrained to abandon the work, believing that it would be unsatisfactory unless complete. But at the last reunion, in 1891, it seemed to be the universal desire that the record should be published, and I resumed the work.

I present the following pages without any apology, believing that you will find all the dates given to be correct, and regretting much that it must still be said of two or three families—no record.

SARAH WILSON SMITH.

—❧❧❧— HISTORY —❧❧❧—

BY REV. A. S. ABBEY.

IT is natural for many of us to desire to know what has been. History is pleasant and profitable as well as prophecy and foreknowledge, granted that the future invites and encourages, the past warns and instructs.

The present sketch must be necessarily somewhat imperfect. Lack of some general information and precise dates renders it more brief than desirable, and to some extent unsatisfactory. Among the names common to the sons of men, we find that the name "Smith" has come in for fully a generous share of abuse. Really it has received scripture measure "heaped up, pressed down and running over."

The Smiths and their descendants, however the old name may be bandied about, do not hang their honor and their glory upon the name, merely as a name, but in the outcome have put forth the goodly endeavor, that by no act of theirs they might make it a jest and a by-word.

Very little can we learn of our Scotch-Irish ancestors who lived and toiled in the long-gone-by in "good old Ireland." When John and Mary Smith, our great grandfather and great grandmother, hand in hand passed along life's highway in the little "green isle," then, as now, life had its vicissitudes and its nobler incentives. Social position was not reckoned at less than its real value, and many now think it a good thing to inherit. "The Smiths were a well to do people in the old country" said a lady recently. She obtained her information from her father who was from the same county and even from the same kirk.

In those olden times the church pew was the index of social standing and general influence. The higher the rank the higher was the pew perched on the church wall, to be reached by steps from the ground floor. The lady informant says: "The Smiths had one at a goodly height." Her people had one on the opposite wall at the same height.

The Smith family consisted of the father John the mother Mary and six sons whose ages are in the order of their names: William, Robert, Samuel, James, John, Jr., and Israel; also one daughter Mary. The younger ones, John, Israel and Mary remained in Ireland with the parents. Mary married a Mr. Hemphill, Israel married, John never married. The four sons William, Robert, Samuel and James, came to this country in the order of their names—William coming in the year 1796, Robert in the year 1796, and the others soon after.

A journey then to America was no light thing. It was at the expense of both time and safety. Now, if a vessel is out even 13 days those interested become anxious. Then, as many weeks was a speedy and prosperous voyage. Young, full of hope they came to the new world seeking their fortunes.

Four years after arriving in this country, William Smith having taken up a 200 acre claim, embraced in the Yager, Chas. Smith and Spencer farms, was, November 16th, 1799, united in marriage to Elizabeth Wilson, at her father's farm, south of Union City, she being also a native of the north of Ireland.

When married they sent to the Lake Shore for a Justice of the Peace to perform the ceremony, and waited two days for his arrival. Married in November, they went on foot through the snow to the Spencer farm. This was the new home, and this was the wedding tour the morn of the honeymoon. All supplies for the first years were packed on the back of oxen, from Franklin. They remained on this claim twenty-one years, then removed to Waterford township and bought 400 acres, gave a power of attorney for the sale of the vacated claim and lost every dollar. William Smith died on the Waterford farm October 7th, 1855. His wife remained on the farm for a time after her husband's death, then, with her daughter Eliza, resided in Waterford borough. After the death of her daughter Eliza she removed to Wayne, and there died at the home of her daughter Emeline, August 6th, 1875, in her 99th year. Well may it be said by those who were fortunate enough to know her: She was no common woman. Always interested in the politics, progress and prosperity of the old country; a keen observer of everything pertaining to our own land, reading history, travels, theological discussions, literature, and a wide range of the newspaper topics of the day. She kept pace with the onward stretch of the times, and was always alive to present interests and tendencies. To the parents, William and Elizabeth Smith, were born eleven children—three sons, eight daughters.

Robert Smith, the second brother, was born in 1768, came to this country in 1796 or soon after; married Elizabeth Richards and settled 200 acres (Part of the same was recently occupied by Octavius Abbey.) Resided there for twenty years or more, and then bought a claim of his brother-in-law, John Richards, in Union Township, and remained on the same until his death. His wife died in 1837, he died in 1848. To these parents were born seven children—four sons and three daughters.

Samuel Smith, the third brother, was born June 16th, 1774; married to Jane Dickey, May 8th, 1796; came to this country in the same year; took up 400 acres embraced in the Perkins, Basset, Abbey and Carson places. They experienced all the hardships incident to pioneer life. Lived there twenty-one years, then removed to Beaver Dam, took up 250 acres. The husband died here in 1859, the wife died in 1862. To these parents were born twelve children—four sons and eight daughters.

VIII.

James Smith, the youngest of the four brothers, was born in Ireland in 1776, and married there to Nancy Canning. Coming to this country they settled on a claim in Wayne Township, and for years that part embracing the south flat was called the Smith Lot. Leaving this claim they settled on the flats below Waterford. He died in 1829, and his wife died in 1848. To these parents were born ten children—four sons and six daughters.

Here were the four families, after years of privation and toil, comfortably settled, and from this root, which we are pleased to think God himself planted in the north-western part of Pennsylvania, has sprung a large and prosperous family. The spirit which characterized the ancestors still animates their descendants. It led the former to this country and guided them in removing the forest and subduing the ground. The result of the same spirit is seen in many fertile farms in every part of this country.

The family soon grew too large to be confined by the hills of western Pennsylvania, and they may now be found in mountain and plain, in city and country, in nearly every northern state from the Atlantic to the Pacific. We find them in every department of industry. There are ministers of the gospel, lawyers, physicians and teachers, prosperous business men and substantial farmers. Neither the very rich nor the very poor have a representation in the family. While some have been prospered more than their cousins, yet all are well to do. As a family they are honest, intelligent, patriotic and God fearing.

We would like to give the personal history of several of the sons and daughters of the family, especially of those, who, during the civil war, went to the front to do battle for their country, five to die on the battle field and one in prison. The rest serving their time out were honorably discharged, and are with us yet to-day, but carrying with them the marks of war and the scars of the enemies bullets. There are others whose names are worthy of mention, whose good deeds and triumphant deaths are recorded in the hearts and on the lives of those who remain behind them, all of which will be made known on the day of that great re-union at which the family will all be present.

AN ORIGINAL POEM.

BY DAVID WILSON.

Recited at the Re-union at Wayne, August 22, 1889.

Four stalwart brothers on life's stage appears,
Their name is called Smith, we call them "pioneers."
They were William and Robert and Samuel and James,
And each had a wife—all respectable dames,
Elizabeths two, and a Jane and a Nancy,
The dames were all lovely, and the names were quite fancy,
All hearty and healthy, good natured and merry,
And came from old Ireland—the county of Derry.
They built them log houses away in the woods,
And cleared up their lands, and laid up some goods,
Their families increased, and 'tis safe to declare
That the boys were all brave, and the girls were all fair.
To supply these four families by tilling the soil
Required much economy, labor and toil,
But a greater economy nobody claims
Than to name twenty-seven children with only nine names.
They had as time went—time still running on,
Three Williams, three Jameses and each had a John,

Three Elizas, three Sallies, three Nancys, three Janes,
 Three Marys and two Marthas kept the old names.
 Alexander and Robert, and George are the ones
 Who complete all the names in the list of the sons.
 Elizabeth's name and Lavina's together,
 And Sophia and Esther and Emeline, whether
 You see it or not, as is proper and meet,
 Make the names of the thirty-five children complete.
 So of names they had plenty and more than enough,
 And in rhymes they run smoothly and never run rough ;
 But out in the wild woods, these girls and these boys :
 Were their tongues rude and boisterous—a Babel of noise,
 Their actions uncouth, and their manners all raw,
 Untaught and untaught like the Indian and squaw ?
 Oh, no ; not at all, for their Bibles were there,
 And these homes in the forest were houses of prayer.
 And the children were taught for instruction to look
 To the precepts contained in that life giving Book,
 Which taught them their duty to God and to man,
 In a way more complete than all other books can ;
 For the very best etiquette man ever know,
 Is to do unto others as they should to you.
 At times in the wilderness, times were quite lonely,
 Surrounded by scenes of a wild nature only ;
 Wild cats and bears all night long kept a prowling,
 And the owls and the wolves kept hooting and howling ;
 But though the wild woods with wild beasts was infested,
 But few of the Smiths were ever molested ;

But enjoyed a great luxury, substantial and rare,
 As they feasted on venison, turkey and bear.
 But the scenes of the forest have all passed away,
 And these fathers and mothers, alas! where are they?
 They have gone to their rest in the mansions above,
 To bask in the sunshine of infinite love.

And now for their offspring a numerous race,
 Who, still on this footstool, are claiming a place.
 Some have made homes in far cities away,
 While quite a large number have met here to-day
 To renew their acquaintance and see their connections,
 To talk of old times and of fond recollections,
 To indulge in a feast under temperate control—
 "A feast of the reason and flow of the soul,"
 To enjoy a sweet hour from envy and strife,
 And leave a bright spot in the pathway of life.
 Did the Smiths ever try to get glory and fame?
 Does the world stand aghast when you mention their name
 Have armies been routed or towns set on fire,
 And the last gleam of liberty caused to expire
 By one of the tribe either living or dead?
 Oh, no; for the Great Prince of Peace is their head,
 With peace for their motto and truth for their guide,
 In truth, love and mercy they hope to abide.
 But when the country calls, their men are on hand
 And ready to march at the word of command.
 In our nation's late troubles when the rebels arose

And our long cherished friends became our worst foes.
 And calls for recruits sounded loud through the North,
 Eleven brave men of these families stepped forth,
 Took their lives in their hands at their country's call,
 But six of the brave men were destined to fall ;
 They were Nelson, Josiah, and Samuel and Reid,
 A James and a George, all brave cousins indeed ;
 Their zeal never flagged and their courage ne'er fled
 Till they met the stern foe and their life's blood was shed ;
 But their names we will cherish and their valor commend,
 While the ages roll on until time has an end.

If you ask me what calling these families pursue ?
 Their callings are many, they are not one or two.
 If you say that is vague and my answer a myth,
 Well then, I will answer they are nearly all Smiths.
 Oh ! then they are blacksmiths, blacksmiths one and all ;
 Why, no ; they are not blacksmiths, they are not black at all.

Well then they must be copper smiths
 And work in baser mettle ;
 And now I know just where to go
 To get a copper kettle.
 Why now ; my friend I apprehend
 That you are growing duller,
 There is no copper in these Smiths,
 Not even copper color.
 Well then, perhaps, they're gold Smiths,
 And gold you'll surely prize,

Because 'tis neither red nor black
But made to please the eyes.
Yes, now you're getting nearer
And so I will declare,
For some indeed are old Smiths,
And some have golden hair ;
And now you see, you have the key,
They are silver Smiths you say,
For many in this crowd you see
Have heads of silver gray.
And now may all these young folks live
To wear that silver crown ;
And may they have for truth and love,
A name of great renown,
Because 'twas said by some wise sage
That wisdom is a man's grayhead,
And life unspotted is old age.

But this happy hour is now waning quite fast,
And so all things earthly will quickly go past.
And we must leave this and at home must appear,
And pass through the humdrum of life one more year ;
And learn to be ready as time runs along,
To meet as we must that invisible throng,
Which has passed from our sight, never more to return
From the land of freed spirits or the mouldering urn.
